LONDON premiere of the Ghana Independence Celebrations film, "Freedom for Ghana," was held at the National Film Theatre last week. The showing was followed by a reception given by the Acting Ghana High Commissioner in the Royal Festival Hall.

Many important diplomats, including Mrs. Pandit, High Commissioner for India, were among the audience of four hundred who applauded the film enthusiastically.

The guests

Sir Charles and Lady Arden-Clarke and their family came up from the country for the occasion. The Duchess of Kent was represented by Mr. Philip Hay, her private secretary, and her Lady-in-waiting.

House of Commons sittings prevented many Members of Parliament from attending, but Mr. Cuthbert Alport, Parliamentary Secretary to the Commonwealth Relations Office, and Mr. Patrick Gordon-Walker, former Labor Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, were among those who went to see the film.

Ghana's anthem

Probably for the first time in any theatre in the U.S., the audience stood at the end for the Ghana National Anthem. Ghanaians in national costume acted as ushers, and in receiving the guests the Acting High Commissioner was assisted by the Deputy Acting High Commissioner, and the Director of Information Services.

Many film critics and people prominent in the entertainment world congratulated the High Commissioner and the film's producer on the film's quality.
